On Page 5, please ~~replace Lines 2 to 7 with~~ --Within the table leg is a threaded insert as part of a positioning means. The threaded insert fits into a threaded relation with the outer threads of the outer threaded cylinder. The inner threads of the outer threaded cylinder receive the threaded glide attachment. The threaded glide attachment is locked into the outer threaded cylinder by a tamper proof fastener at a glide end thereof.--.

On Page 5, please replace Lines 8 to 15 with --Oppositely disposed from the threaded glide attachment and on the opposing end of the outer threaded cylinder is a collar head. The collar head provides a part of the securing means and a part of the mounting member for the glide, and is thus internal to the leg tube, when the tamper-resistant, adjustable table glide is assembled. The collar head prevents removal of the tamper-resistant, adjustable table glide from the table leg. The collar head is preferably of metal and must be of sufficient size to prevent the glide being removed from the leg tube.--.

On Page 7, please replace Lines 20 to 25 with --With reduced portion 154 adjacent to enlarged portion 152 in stepped aperture 150, screw threads 134 permit unremovable attachment of the glide 138. In this fashion for securing means, unremovable head 136 combines with collar head 132, in order to prevent removal of tamper-resistant, adjustable table glide 100 from table 112 (Figure 1).--

On Page 8, please replace Lines 10 to 17 with —Now as seen in combination with Figure 2, Figure 3 and Figure 4, the tamper-resistant, adjustable table glide 100 achieves unremovable characteristics combined with adjustability due the use of threaded aperture 120 and cooperating structures. To provide a positioning means, threaded aperture 120 receives threaded cylindrical insert 122 at the outer threads 124 thereof, and permits positioning of glider 138 either up or down, as desired. Such adjustment is limited by collar head 132, which provides the mounting member.
